

Exquisite Design... with Purpose

American MemoryCraft is the producer of the finest line of hand blown glass urns for cremation memorial use in the United States. We are not a factory. We are a group of art professionals working together to produce one memorial vessel at a time, by hand, for one family at a time. Our mission, from the beginning, has been to provide the finest quality hand blown glass memorials that meet the needs of the professional and private cremation community at the very best value.

Why Choose American MemoryCraft?

Here's what makes us and our hand blown glass urns the most appropriate hand blown glass memorials available:

- Opaque white liner to prevent contents from being visible from the outside
- Each piece is guaranteed unique, never to be made again
- Full size urns* designed to fit 12" standard niches
- Custom Size and Color requests
- Exclusive color patterns
- Unique palettes (color sets) to suit any preference or environment

History & Tradition

Did You Know?

Cremation Urns

Cremation urns have long been used as a traditional method of memorial. The oldest known cremation urn was found in China. It dates as far back as 7000 BC, indicating an ancient history & tradition. For the Greeks, Syrians, Romans, and Hungarians cremation was a common practice. For a time, prior to a cultural moratorium, cremation was also practiced all the way west to Ireland. Likewise, to the east, cremation urns were used by the Slavs, residents of the western Caucasus mountains, and throughout China.

Urns in Rome and the Classical World

The use of handblown glass cremation urns began to appear in Roman civilization around the 1st Century AD. Contemporaneous examples are also found throughout the Mediterranean and Persian Gulf. Because silica—in the form of sand surrounding the Mediterranean sea—was widely available, glass production became common practice. Archaeological evidence shows that it proved to be a very practical material for making vessels. Blown glass cremation urns have been found in the famous Columbaria of Rome. It's noteworthy that these urns remain intact and still protect their priceless contents after thousands of years. Examples of these amazing artifacts stand out for the creative range of design the Romans used in form and decoration. Even two thousand years ago, people used beauty to comfort the loss of a loved one.
